Weekend Mini Vacations

A Message from TJHS President
Vickie Vogel

Four times a year, TJHS meets in different cities and towns around the state. On Sunday morning, we have our board meetings, which are open. The rest of the weekend, usually beginning with Friday night services at a local synagogue, is filled with history, art, culture, food, and fun. We visit museums, galleries, historic sites, and even cemeteries. We learn the Jewish history of that area and meet the local Jewish community.

Our next weekend mini vacation will be in Beaumont January 11-13, 2008. Co-chairs David and Binnie Hoffman have a wonderful weekend of activities lined up for us.

The spring meeting is the Annual Gathering or general membership meeting. This is the largest and most action-packed weekend of the year. In addition to our sightseeing, we elect our officers and board members for the next year, review our past year and outline plans for the future. There is a board meeting (this time it's usually on Friday), and the membership meeting is on Sunday morning.

Please mark your calendars now for our next Annual Gathering on April 4-6, 2008 in Waco. The Waco planning committee, chaired by Ima Joy Gandler and Ed Katten, has been hard at work for months. They are planning it for YOU.

If you have never attended one of our weekend meetings, I encourage you to do so. It's like a quarterly family reunion. We tell our stories and do fun things together, learning and laughing.

TJHS is a friendly, welcoming organization, and we urge you to take full advantage of what we have to offer.

If you have any questions about TJHS activities, email txjhs@yahoo.com or call me. I'm in your new directory. If you didn't get one, come to a meeting and I'll deliver it in person.

President

Galveston to Frisco: L'Dor VaDor

by Davie Lou Solka

A moving and memorable moment in the life of two congregations occurred on Sunday, August 12, 2007 in Galveston, Texas. A more than 100-year-old Torah now has a new home—traveling from Galveston to Frisco, Texas. The new congregation, B'nai Israel, in Frisco needed a Torah, and Congregation Beth Jacob in Galveston had one.

Congregation B'nai Israel is a newly formed congregation in Frisco, a community of 100,000 in Collin County between McKinney and Denton. It was formed in May by twelve couples who wanted to make it easier for themselves and others with young children to educate their children with religious training closer to home. "Receiving a Torah scroll means everything to use," said Stan Friedman, the para-rabbinic who leads the services. "The Torah scroll is a symbol of our becoming a con-

Kathleen Sukiennik, Congregation Beth Jacob's administrator, said that they will also be sharing some prayer books with the new congregation. Although Beth Jacob is a Conservative congregation and B'Nai Israel is Reform, Sukiennik says "We have several connections with the new congregation in Frisco. One of the founders of the new synagogue is the sister of one of our members and the family has long been associated with Beth Jacob. Also, one of their deceased relatives was a founding member of this synagogue. So, passing the Torah to them only seemed the right thing to do."

Members of the Galveston congregation are happy with the large number of children at B'nai Israel, since there are no longer children in their congregation.

"Our Torah scroll will be passed along to become part of the lives of a new generation of children," Sukiennik added. The Torah needed some repair and was used during the recent High Holy Days. "This Torah scroll is giving new life to our congregation," said Friedman.

TJHS Traveling Exhibit

The Texas Jewish Historical Society has compiled two museum quality photo exhibits with explanations depicting early Jewish life and contributions. Both exhibits highlight the lives of Jews in Texas since the early part of the century.

Each exhibit is comprised of approximately thirty-six photographs that can either be self-standing with an easel back or hung on a wall. There is no charge for the exhibits and they will be shipped prepaid freight via UPS in waterproof boxes to your location. The only expense to the borrower will be the shipping of the exhibit back via UPS ground.

The exhibits have been displayed in various locations in Texas and other parts of the United States, including Rhode Island and California. They are an excellent program for schools, congregations and other organizations. To schedule the exhibits, please contact Jack Gerrick at 817-927-8765 or email him at texbed@aol.com.

Golden Land, Golden Opportunity

by David Casstevens

(reprint courtesy of the Fort Worth Star Telegram, July 4, 2007)

An American flag flies every day outside a modest home in the Westcliff neighborhood of Fort Worth. The resident's patriotism is enduring. "With all our country's faults," R. D. Moses said with feeling, "there's no better place." The banner the 79-year old retiree displays from his front porch is partly a tribute to the memory of his father, who fled persecution and poverty in Russia a century ago and brought his family to the golden medine – the golden land - of America.

Between 1880 and 1920, more than two million Jews fled Russia and came to the U.S. Wolf Moses and his wife, Rachel, and their young daughter crossed the ocean in steerage, arrived at Ellis Island in 1903, and lived in tenement housing in Brooklyn. Wolf had no formal education. He didn't speak English. A shoemaker, he limited himself to ten cents a day to pay for his meager lunch, a bagel and coffee.

At that time, a group of wealthy Jewish families in New York helped Jewish immigrants resettle across the United States. In the summer of 1907, Moses and his family came to Fort Worth, Texas. They traveled by ship from New York to Galveston and then boarded a train. En route to Cowtown, the Texas & Pacific Railroad lost the family's household goods, valued at less than $25.

By 1910, almost 600 Russian immigrants lived in Tarrant County. Many, including the Moses family, settled on the north side, near Pioneer's Rest Cemetery. The 29-year-old cobbler applied for U.S. citizenship and found steady employment at a downtown shoe shop, earning $9 a week. Wolf Moses was grateful for his job, but had bigger dreams. Three years later, the Yiddish-speaking father of a growing family got an interest-free loan from the Hebrew Free Loan Association and opened a business on Main Street, where the Fort Worth Convention Center now stands.

After losing his wife to cancer in 1924, Moses was introduced by a matchmaker friend in Dallas to a young widow with a remarkable story of her own. Aida Gritzewsky was born in the Ukraine. After three of her four children died from typhus and her husband was killed in war, she immigrated to Mexico and later came to the United States.

Wolf and Aida married in 1926 and two years later R. D. Moses was born. A first-generation American, the child grew up learning English. His parents spoke Russian in his presence only when they didn't want him to understand what they were saying.

Wolf Moses disliked his trade but prided himself in his workmanship and role as reliable provider. "Whatever you do, do it right," he told R. D., who still can picture his father stepping off a streetcar at the end of a workday and briskly walking the half-block to their two-story home on Hurley Street, in what is now the Fairmount neighborhood. Wolf Moses marched like a soldier, shoulders thrown back, chin up, buoyant.

The memory is as treasured as the hand-made leather billfold the eldest Moses handed down to this son. In the 1950s, R. D. Moses charted his own course, working at—and later owning—Ajax Glass and Mirror. Two of his sons, Buddy and Arthur, now run the glass business. Another son, Shayne, is a local attorney.

As small children, they knew their loving grandfather as "Papa Moses." Wolf Moses referred to himself as an American Jew. "American first, Jew second," R. D. said. "The two went together in that order."

Moses rarely spoke of his Russian homeland, perhaps because the life he knew there as a child and young man was so oppressive and miserable. Love for his adopted country – Wolf Moses revered President Franklin Roosevelt – was as much a part of this man as his callus-hardened hands.

With a longing to learn more about his heritage, the shoemaker's son took a trip back in time three years ago. Accompanied by Shayne and a niece, R. D. Moses flew to Ukraine's capital of Kiev. From there he found the village of Kominka, where he met his late mother's cousins and saw the remains of Aida's childhood home.

Aida Moses died in 1957. Her husband lived another ten years, working full time at his trade until age 83. He died at age 90 in a convalescent home with his son at his bedside. The immigrant couple rests in a family plot at the Ahavath Shalom Hebrew Cemetery.

“It took faith and a lot of gump-tion. I wouldn’t have that courage,” R. D. Moses said in admiration of his father’s decision to begin a new life in a land so different from his own, filled with so many challenges and uncertainties.

The cobbler never became wealthy, but he lived richly in this country and put down roots for his children and their children.

He worked for fifty years at his small downtown shop, Liberty Bell Shoe Repair.

Ima Joy Gandler, TJHS Board Member from Waco, TX, asked that the following corrections be made to the article in our last news magazine regarding the Historical Marker Dedication for Temple Rodef Sholom in Waco:

- The oldest family names affiliated with the congregation include the following: Desenberg-Scharff, Efron, Ginsburg, Gorin, Kestner, Lipsitz, Naman, Sachs, Sanger, Schwartz, Snaman, and Wood.
- Rabbi Seth Stander (2000-2004), now of Congregation Beth El, Missouri City, Texas.
